MADO supports all the customization for window (included backgrounds, dynamic background, skins, texture, colors, theme, cursors, windows, buttons, menus and all details). Even if you're a beginner, your windows will look like a pro. Support this project. [Import] Compatibility Require MADO 1.0.0 and higher. Append ";mado=" to your rpmmode line. Extension Install If you don't know how to install, use the dropdown button to select "Install from downloaded file", so download the zip file and extract it. You can't use the author's license key, if you want to use MADO, you have to register on MADO website. I have no idea about MADO. But I was curious of it. I have two questions. It's possible to put all the titles in single file? Currently, I create one file by "title1" "title2", it's necessary to open each of them to change the title. Also, there is no option to cancel? If I press "cancel" button, all options on the window are closed, which means that all titles and even descriptions are lost. I have a few questions about it because I made a program too. Is it possible to put all of the titles in a single file? I used the "Install from downloaded file" method. If possible, please let me know. That's correct, you have to install the extension. If you don't know how to install, use the dropdown button to select "Install from downloaded file", so download the zip file and extract it. You have to activate the extension by doing "Append ";mado=" to your rpmmode line", so do this.Q: How to convert.NET type into pandas dataframe column I am using gRPC interface in C# to do some data fetching from MSQl DB to C# web API. I got the string from MSQl DB for one column of pandas dataframe and it is in.NET string type. I am trying to convert the string to pandas dataframe column. The string is in below format StringValue = ""DevoKid, $56.39 on @ daily deals: @boots. 82157476af
